Just drag & drop a bunch of video files on the splitter, choose the output directory, and the video will be split into multiple parts. Then you can just drag&drop each part into any video players that can handle that kind of file. No more waste of time shuffling video files and burning DVDs. Features: Simple, easy to use, the program also supports drag & drop. Batch processing, cut videos of various lengths Cut videos into smaller parts based on their length Fully compatible with Windows 10 Create thumbnail and subtitle for each video part Support multi-core CPU What's new: Microsoft account login support, supported devices and storage space increase. IDRip 3.8.3 is now available on IDRip page. Synopsis: MP4 Video Splitter Software can help you cut videos into multiple parts. It supports batch processing, and it is fairly easy to use, but it lacks advanced features and offers a disappointing user interface. MP4 Video Splitter Software – Best Choices for Popular Products Video splitting has long been considered a frustrating process. You have two options: Pay a professional to do it for you, or use an easy-to-use tool like MP4 Video Splitter Software. MP4 Splitter Software is one of the more useful programs of its kind, but it does have its fair share of limitations. It is easy to use, and it does an adequate job of splitting a batch of video files. This program is suitable for novices, as no specialized knowledge is required in order to process videos. Essentially, you only need to load your files, select the desired split interval and define the output location. The program also offers support for drag and drop, and it is even possible to import all the MP4 files stored in a particular folder in one quick operation. In addition, the program cannot encode your videos to other formats, a feature that many users would likely have found helpful. Still, MP4 Video Splitter Software is a great tool for users who need to divide a large number of videos into multiple parts, either for uploading on various websites or sharing with others. It is lightweight and user-friendly, and it offers fairly good performance. In terms of video quality, MP4 Video Splitter Software is highly recommended. The program even supports high-speed video conversion. MP4 Video Splitter Software is a useful program that lets you split MP4

What's New In MP4 Video Splitter Software?

MP4 Video Splitter Software is an innovative software application that enables users to split videos into multiple files of equal length. The program supports batch processing, and it is fairly easy to use, but it lacks advanced features and offers a disappointing UI. Main Features: 1. A batch file processing function for video with high efficiency; 2. Widely used MP4 format support; 3. Drag and drop operation support; 4. Wide support of the output folder with different file format; 5. Rip DVDs with HD resolution; 6. Equally split the video file, make sure the length of output files is the same; 7. User-friendly interface. Limitations: 1. Only the MP4 format supported; 2. Only supports the splitting of video into equal parts, not other files; Publisher: kryptonsoftwarekf.com Category: MediaQ: backbone - bind between dom and model Backbone.js is my favorite framework right now, but I'm struggling with a particular pattern. Suppose I have a view like this: var View = Backbone.View.extend({ el: $('body'), initialize: function () { this.collection = new MyCollection(); this.collection.bind('change', this.render); }, render: function () { $(this.el).html(this.template(this.model.toJSON())); return this; } }); As you can see I'm binding my model's 'change' event to the view's render method. My question is: where should I place this binding if I have a hierarchical view? For example, for render to work, I would have to call render in some part of the model. So my question is: should I just put this "render" method in the model or the view? More generally: there's a problem with "confusing" hierarchy of the views. Let's take an example: var MyView = Backbone.View.extend({ el: $('body'), template: _.template(''), initialize: function () { this.collection = new MyCollection(); this.collection.bind('change', this.render); },
